THE FRIENDLY GECKO

Just south of the Equator and bounded by the Indian Ocean, Tanzania, East Africa's largest country, is an endlessly fascinating place to visit and one of Africa's finest destinations for safari.

One-quarter of its surface area has been set aside for conservation purposes, with the world renowned Serengeti National Park to the incredible and still quite unknown Selous Game Reserve, these two protected areas alone are home to an estimated 20% percent of Africa's large mammal population. For a millennia, Tanzania has played an essential part in the life of the African continent. The great wildebeest migration alone comprises the largest movement of land animals on the planet. With over 25% of the country's total landmass dedicated to wildlife parks and conservation areas Tanzania remains, wholeheartedly committed to the preservation of Africa's great wilderness.

The Ngorongoro Crater often called the 8th Natural Wonder of the World is a must-see for its sheer beauty.

The elephants of Tarangire National Park, and the tree-climbing lions of Lake Manyara, also reward the discerning traveler. The Saadani Game Reserve, famed for its views of elephant playing in the Indian Ocean, is just one of many lesser-known national parks that offer equally rewarding experiences for guests willing to wander off the beaten track. There is Mount Kilimanjaro and Mount Meru, respectively the highest and the fifth-highest peaks on the continent and Lakes Victoria, Tanganyika and Nyasa, the three largest bodies in Africa. And yet there is more to Tanzania than just safari. Tropical beaches, coral reefs and Swahili culture along the Indian Ocean coast are also a major attraction for visitors who want to end their experience of Tanzania's natural wonder with some well-earned relaxing moments.
